Leadership for Environmental Solutions

The TCEQ's Clean Texas Partnership Conference gets under way in March.

The TCEQ's Clean Texas Partnership Conference, scheduled for March 4–6 in Plano, will highlight opportunities and incentives for businesses and local governments to become environmental leaders.

The annual gathering will focus on topics such as sustainable design, innovative programs, clean air programs, water quality and availability issues, and clean transportation initiatives. Workshops will offer tips on regulatory flexibility, employee education, and environmental management systems.

The presentations are tailored for an audience including business and industry representatives; local and state governments; organizations that support livable communities; and environmental staff from military bases, colleges, and schools.

Clean Texas is a voluntary environmental leadership program that recognizes organizations known for finding creative solutions to environmental challenges. The nonregulatory program supports regional partnerships and promotes public awareness and participation in activities that protect air, water, and land resources. Membership totals 205.

New members will be recognized at the March conference, as well as public school teachers who incorporate environmental education into their daily lessons.
