Black voters

In Georgia and North Carolina, support for increasing the minimum wage to $15 was most popular at 46% and 45%, respectively.

Like many other Democratic constituents, 32% of Black voters want $50,000 of student debt canceled. They also wanted housing vouchers for low-income families that cap rent at 30% of income.

Police and safety

Nearly half of Black voters, 47%, said they felt unsafe in the U.S. More than half of Black women, 54%, said they felt unsafe, and 36% of Black men said the same.

As debates about crime roil major U.S. cities, 35% said they want to shift funding for police to preventative measures like mental health support and social work. Only 20% of those polled said they wanted to increase police funding to reduce crime.

On white supremacy, 47% said they wanted extremists removed from federal, local and state police departments, and 38% said anyone who committed a hate crime should be banned from gun purchases.

Messaging problems for Biden

Terrance Woodbury, founding partner and chief executive officer of HT Strategies, said Democrats will have to champion economic and social issues to Black voters ahead of the 2024 presidential election.

"Democrats cannot decide between addressing economic issues and social issues. They cannot make a forced choice between issues of identity and issues of economy, because for Black voters, they're inseparable," Woodbury said.

They'll also have to adjust how they interact with voters.

Nearly 80% of Black voters said they saw television ads from Democrats or liberal organizations last year. Yet the same percentage of Black voters said no Democrats or liberal organizations knocked on their door.

Meanwhile, 77% of those polled saw an ad from Republicans or conservative organizations, and 84% said no Republicans or conservative organizations knocked on their door.

Why some voters stayed home

Of the Black voters surveyed, 18% said they did not vote last year. In North Carolina, Georgia and California, the percentages of people who didn't vote were 22%, 14% and 18%, respectively.

North Carolina Democratic senatorial nominee Cheri Beasley lost her election to then-GOP Rep. Ted Budd by less than 4 percentage points.

Of the Black voters who didn't vote in 2022, 42% said they were not informed about the candidates. In California, 56% of those who didn't vote said they were uninformed about the candidates, as did 35% of Black voters in Georgia who didn't vote.

LaTosha Brown, co-founder of Black Voters Matter, a Georgia-based civic engagement group, said the disconnect with Black voters stems from campaigns focusing on white voters to the detriment of Black Americans. Another piece of disconnect is not just how campaigns engage with Black voters but who does the engagement.

"Because of how the media has systematically excluded us, excluded our voices, excluded our images, we have over the years, over centuries, we've actually created our own methods of communication," Brown said.

Beauty shops, churches, batherships and even TikTok are ways to reach Black voters across different generations.

"You got to have some real validators, and the validators are not, contrary to popular belief, they're not the celebrities," Brown said. "We don't listen to celebrities like that. That's not what we do, because there's not a trusted source."

The survey was done in December and has a 2.8% margin of error of the full sample and a 4.8% margin of error in each state.

The Port Aransas Fire Department surveys the area after Hurricane Harvey landed in the Coastal Bend on Aug. 26, 2017. CALLER-TIMES FILE

Port Aransas

Consulting team manager Michael Dorris of Del Sol Consulting said Thursday that FEMA was using a model for estimating construction costs that didn't match the reality of what it costs to build in the Coastal Bend. Negotiators provided bids as proof of local construction costs.

FEMA's original offer was $3.9 million, the team's announcement stated. After early efforts stalled, the process eventually moved toward arbitration.

City staff directed its Hurricane Harvey recovery consultants, Broadus and Associates and Del Sol, "to put together the facts showing the square footage and cost inaccuracies on FEMA's part," the news release stated.

Arbitration was originally scheduled for early February, but FEMA extended the date by four weeks, according to the news release.

Armed with facts compiled by the city's consultants detailing what the city saw as FEMA's "inaccuracies" in cost and square footage estimates, Port Aransas City Manager David Parsons, Finance Director Darla Honea and representatives of Broadus and Del Sol traveled to New Orleans recently to argue the city's case.

"Faced with a preponderance of supporting documentation, FEMA decided a settlement prior to the arbitration hearing was in their best interest," Ragas wrote.

Next steps for rebuild

With negotiations in the past, the project is moving forward.

"Gignac Architects will begin finalizing the drawings for Council approval to move forward with sending it out to bid for construction around late-April 2023," the news release stated. "Construction will take 15 months once the project is awarded."

Dorris, whose firm joined the FEMA negotiations in 2019, told the Caller-Times that the final award is "going to cover 100% of what was lost."

A call to city officials about the final cost of building the new station was not returned by press time.

The email stated that Parsons, the city manager, thanked FEMA and the consulting group "for their efforts in coming to this satisfactory outcome that benefits the City and the citizens of Port Aransas."

A Port Aransas city official weighed in on the Wednesday announcement.

"Fantastic news and congratulations to the whole team," Mayor Wendy Moore said via email. "I truly am grateful for everyone's hard work on this and excited to see the reconstruction begin!"
